C:\Users\%USERNAME%\Documents\BASIC-86\>Falco Q: How can I run two instances of my application on two simulators via a single xcode project? I have my application that is currently working on simulator 1 and simulator 2 for testing. Is it possible to run the same application on two simulators? How can I do it? A: You can set up two simulators (two devices) the same way you set up one. However, your app can only be used on one at a time. For instance, you could only run one app at a time on the iPad, and another on the iPhone. If you were switching from one to the other (e.g., on a button click), your app would have to suspend its running thread, or your app would crash. If, on the other hand, you wanted to test two different versions of your app at the same time on the same device, you could set up two completely separate projects, each containing a different version of your app, and load them with two different schemes. See "Multiple Scheme Development", or "Building Applications with Multiple Schemes" for more information. of the requirements of this [subsection] and not in violation of the confidentiality provisions of S.J.R. 10-3.1.
