The first part of the query works perfectly. It retrieves all the data for a certain period, and then groups those results by date for use later. What I'm trying to figure out now is a way to add a date range filter to the query. For example, I might want all records between a specific date range (i.e. from [from_date] to [to_date] inclusive), and maybe include the [created_at] and [updated_at] columns on all the results. Here's what I have so far... SELECT @ArrayType = REPLICATE('y', 27), @Array = CONCAT(@Array, ',')

What's New in the?

SKIDROW has released a new update for the award-winning Retro Game Emulator GENESIS for the Xbox ONE. The latest update, which was released today, will fix the issue that prevented the game from connecting to the Xbox Live network. This might be the only decent way to drink hot water. In this $5 DIY on the Llewellyn website, you combine cider vinegar, boric acid, baking soda, and salt. Then you put hot water in a medium glass bowl, pour in your mixture and wait. The salt will react with the acid and create carbonic acid, which will then combine with the baking soda and create a carbon dioxide bubble in your bowl. Boil that for two minutes (time it so that it's only 3/4 of the way through the process when you start to stir), then pour into your glass to cool. This is $5 at Llewellyn and I couldn't make it without science, so let's keep that in mind as we watch this video: You may also want to try this mild carbonation method, which I also picked up from Llewellyn: I think it's for sale on their website in the Llewellyn section but I can't find it, so I'm not sure. I like the process because it does not require, nor does it need, a science nerd. It's a recipe that uses a solid, stand-up, do-it-yourself, household gadget (the plastic ware) and a dime-sized amount of table salt. It's inexpensive, fun, no math, and I'm even proud of the ingredient list. You make a little movie, it's ready in minutes and it's the best beer-making technique that I've ever seen. I even make mine out of beer. I thought I'd share a video I made about it: Ingredients: 1-1/2 cups of warm water 1/4 cup boric acid 1/4 cup baking soda 1/2 teaspoon salt plastic ware (must be safe for food contact) Method: Pour water, boric acid, baking soda and salt in a plastic bowl. Stir. Then boil for two minutes. Pour into
